

85. Les High List (3:05)

That's why I would just as soon have it called the 'Les High List' even though I don't do anything with it. I just feel I'm the guy that started it for a very definite reason. I needed to get better contact with these guys.

Now could we say that a mentoring project of this extent would be impossible without the list? I would probably guess that. First place, what is the first thing I do when I want to talk to somebody? I get the list out. I probably handle the list more than anybody else by far - all the time now that I'm making calls right now.

If I don't use - pick that list up four or five times a day, I'd be surprised. Some people will never look at it until you're ready to call a person. The list is almost the most important document in my house right now. That's why I want to call it the Les High List and I know that seemed very possessive.

But no, I had the most effort to make it possible and the reason it's here is because I did it. Now we've added wives email, the guy's email and a wife's email, wife's cell number, the guys cell number, a home number and then sometimes two addresses - winter address - the summer address.

There's a section of the lost people at the front and Manning has upgraded that. He said instead of having the last person die be at the bottom of the list, let's turn the list around so the most recent person died is the first name you read. And then it goes down the list and down the list to when you'll be reading the last guy which happened to be Sanders who passed away of cancer two or three years after he graduated.

It's very upgraded. The most recent thing Dick and I talked about was whether to put the names in capitals or not. I told him I kind of like to have the last name in capitals. I'm looking for the list, I'm looking for a name. If your capitals draw my attention to their name.

Yeah, I noticed that when I was going through the letters, you know, it was easy to speed read and find stuff because the names are in capitals. Well, didn't I do that most of time? Yes you did and it leads me to believe that I think I might try starting to do that.
